Category save options just got fancier

Earlier this year, we added expanded save options for the Article Editor. A few weeks ago, we added a floating save footer to articles.

The Category Editor was feeling a bit left out, so we've added all the same function to it.

The expanded Save menu works largely the same: you have the option to Save, Save & back (which will take you back to Pages with the category open), or Save & create new (which will take you back to Pages and create a new category in whatever place the previous category was).

Sample expanded save menu in Category Editor, no default save action set

You can set the default save action to set what clicking "Save" does.

The only main difference in the expanded save options is that your default save action for categories is separate from the default save action you've set for articles. So you can keep a "Save" default save action in categories but set "Save & back" as the default save action for articles. We decided to keep these separate to give you more control over the default workflows you're using.

The floating save bar works the same way as in the article editor, appearing once you scroll the Save bar in the upper right out of sight.
