Updates to shared content article messages

Last Modified on 12/28/2022 12:24 pm EST

We've been slowly trying to improve the messaging and documentation around our shared content articles (see Updates to "link to existing article" wording & messaging for the last round of updates we made here).

These changes were helpful, but we knew there was still some confusion about whether an article was a parent or child just by looking at it. We've updated the messages again so that they explicitly say whether the article is a child or parent:

Full Article Title   Add Short Title   Add Internal Note   Add Internal Title

| How do I know when there are comments pending approval? |

⚠️ This is a child shared content article. Updating it will update its parent shared content article. Stop sharing this content
   - View comments pending approval in KnowledgeOwl Support

New child article message

Full Article Title   Add Short Title   Add Internal Note   Add Internal Title

| View comments pending approval |

⚠️ This is a parent shared content article. Updating it will update these child shared content articles:
   - Comments reporting ▸ How do I know when there are comments pending approval? in KnowledgeOwl Support

New parent article message

We hope this makes it a little easier at a glance to distinguish between the two.

Next up in this land of shared content messaging updates are the messages we show for articles that are synced as part of a category sync between separate knowledge bases. Stay tuned!